ABSTRACT

The contents of this annotated bibliography, prepared as part of an E.S.E.A. Title III project, are divided into three sections: (1) The role of the Negro in the historical development of the United States; (2) The Negro in family, school, and community life in contemporary America; and, (3) Highlights in African history -- past and present. All titles have been verified with "Books in Print" so that either the publisher or a book jobber should be able to supply them. The listings are up-to-date and had a terminal assembly date of June 15, 1969. The materials have been grouped so that their relation to the elementary curriculum is evident. For each book listed the following information is provided: classification number, title, author, publisher, copyright date, number of pages, illustration status, price, annotation, and assessed reading level. FOREWORD

It is now about a year since the Department of School Libraries began to assemble collections of materials dealing with various ethnic groups--the patterns of culture, the geographic movement, the inter-relations to various societies, the contributions to these societies, the outstanding leaders within the groups, the literature produced by their writers, as well as personal narratives and viewpoints.

With the addition to the curricula on both elementary and secondary levels, the Department has developed two fairly comprehensive bibliographies of book materials which are currently available on the market. All titles have been verified with Books In Print so that either the publisher or a book jobber should be able to supply them. The listings are up-to-date, and had a terminal assembly date of June 15, 1969.

Still to be added to both the secondary and this elementary list are the nonbook materials available in the Department. The new audiovisual catalog will list the films. These are not listed by ethnic group, but referral can be made to the social studies listings for selections.

Within this bibliography the materials have been grouped so that their relation to the elementary curriculum units is evident.

The work has been conducted by several of the department staff, but the major annotation and editorial work has been done by Miss Henrietta Herman, Acting Supervisor.
